BEATS THE TELEPHONE.

Prof. Elshah Gray's Wonderful and Valuable Invention.

Chicago Herald: Prof. Elshah Gray, of Highland park, has just completed an invention scarcely less wonderful and valuable than the telephone, but of which he was the inventor, but of which he said the professor yesterday, "I shall give a private test of my new telegraph, an invention which will largely supplant the telephone. I have already tested it to my satisfaction, over and over again, and on Saturday I shall give an exhibition to some gentlemen from the east. I have just taken it to pieces to make some slight alterations, or I would show it to you now."

"By this invention you can sit down at your office in Chicago, take a pencil in your hand, write a message to me, and as your pencil moves a pencil here in my laboratory moves simultaneously and forms the same letters and words in the same way. What you write in Chicago is instantly reproduced facsimile."

"The first of the many advantages so common to the telephone. It will be much less affected by induction. There will be no trouble in catching words or syllables, letters or figures. No misunderstandings will result. Besides, it leaves a record in every language spoken, and there can be no dispute about what is said. For all commercial transactions this would be an invaluable feature."

In ordering goods, or in sales of stock or grain, or in transmitting names and addresses in any language, the telephone is obvious. For desultory conversation, it is true, it would not be so rapid of working, for the reason that one cannot write as fast as he can talk, but, on the other hand, it would save the trouble of dictating and the expense of telephonic communication.

"When one person wishes to communicate with another by the telegraph he pushes a button, which rings an annunciator in the exchange, or in the office of the person to whom he wishes to converse. Then the first party takes his writing pencil from its holder—and this may be pen or pencil—and writes his message upon a roll of paper. As he writes, the current flows quickly, and when it is finished his simple word—say the telegraphic signal "30"—will indicate the end. Both parties have a full record of the conversation, and each possesses the other's telegraph."

"In writing, continued the professor, "your pen or pencil is attached to two small wires, and these wires regulate the currents which control the pencil at the other end of the wire. But these wires give no trouble, as when they are in contact they are there, and can write with as much facility as if they were absent."

"Can this invention be used to advantage commercially? It will not cost more than $15 or $20, and is easily kept in order. I have tried it again and again, and it works more perfectly than the telephone, and is much less liable to have its usefulness interfered with by induction."

"But this is not the only great invention Prof. Gray has in hand. He has just completed also an automatic switch-board for telephonic exchanges by which the user of a telephone or telegraph can put himself in communication with any other instrument in the city simply by touching a button to a certain number of times corresponding to the number of the other instrument. If the wire leading to that instrument is already in use he is informed of that fact by the ringing of a bell, and he waits until the other party has finished his message, and he is now often compelled to do, and then pushes the button again. By this invention one person in an exchange can do the work of thirty or forty under the present system."

"The inventor of this system, he said, is now often compelled to do, and then pushes the button again. By this invention one person in an exchange can do the work of thirty or forty under the present system."

grade with scarcely an effort, and with a passenger train could strike a fifty mile an hour gate with ease. The other one wouldn't go at all. Even when quietly open she would simply give a few sputter puffs of black smoke, a few turns of her driving wheels, and then would stop. The way she exhausted steam showed that she was a vixen.
